The Road toward Multilingualism: Effective School Models and Parental Involvement

A child learning a language is learning about the world, about how it is organized and how it works. This is very different, if only in degree, from the adult learning a second language, who tends to work the other way round: he brings his world with him and uses the language to try to express it.

Edith Harding and Philip Riley,
The Bilingual Family: A Handbook for Parents

Dear Parents,

Multilingualism may well be our country's strongest asset in leading the way into the globally interconnected world of the 21st century. The richness of the USA's social and cultural melting pot is what makes the United States unique compared to many countries. For this reason, it makes sense to develop our children's language capability from an early age through high-quality programs.

Total Immersion and Partial Immersion/Dual Language Schools Build Dual Literacy Skills

Total immersion and partial immersion/dual language (also called two-way immersion) programs or schools are instructional models that have a proven track record in fostering high achievement levels in English and in another language. By developing dual literacy through the teaching of academic content and skills, these "additive" program models contribute to building children's ethnic self-esteem and cross-cultural understanding. Children enrolled in total immersion or partial immersion/dual language programs or schools often surpass their monolingual peers in tests of basic skills in English language arts and math while developing second language proficiency.

Although still uncommon, these types of programs are growing in numbers in some areas of the country. The Fairfax County Public Schools in Virginia (www.fcps.edu), the thirteenth largest school system in the nation, is well known for its dual language/partial immersion offerings in a variety of languages.

In Maryland, the Montgomery County Public Schools system (www.montgomeryschoolsmd.org) is also well-known for its excellent total and partial immersion programs.

Visit the Center for Applied Linguistics (www.cal.org) to learn more about language immersion programs and two-way immersion programs.

Parental involvement can make multilingualism a success story for our children

“Parents Take Language Class into Their Own Hands” was the title of a recent article published in the New York Times. Parental involvement in language learning is a growing trend, not only for bilingual families, but even for families who do not speak a second language. The involvement level goes from expanding language learning opportunities beyond the classroom (e.g. by enrolling children in extra-curricular classes, purchasing materials for home use, etc.) all the way to taking language classes together as a family.

Parental support organizations are also emerging all over the world:

- Multilingual Children’s Association (USA)
- The World Language Network (USA)
- The Multilingual Network (Dubai)
- Multilingual Family (U.K.)
